Orange launches new mobile version of Group website orange.com

The new mobile version of orange.com offers a new, more intuitive and user-friendly interface accessible from any mobile phone from today: simply enter www.orange.com into your mobile browser. On the latest smartphones it also features touch icons for access to various information on the move, including international Group news, a summary of the latest press releases and even France Telecom share price updates.

With this new version, users on the move can also browse France Telecom Orange job offers, internships and training contracts. Students, graduates and jobseekers can access all the Group's career opportunities worldwide, via orange.com on their mobile.

A simple search by profession and job type is available, covering all the countries within the Group's footprint. Users can also set up alerts to receive a free weekly e-mail or SMS listing any new job postings which match their criteria.

Mobile consultations of the orange.com site doubled between 2008 and 2009, demonstrating the rapid development of mobile internet in 2009. They now account for almost 10% of visits to orange.com.

orange.com, the Group's main website, was viewed 10.8 million times in 2009. For the second year in a row, orange.com is number two in the H&H Webranking for major French corporate sites, according to the ninth edition of the European rankings recently released by Swedish firm Hallvarsson & Hallvarsson.
