Ethics and the fight against corruption

Challenges / vision / beliefs

Orange is committed to conducting its activities soundly and with integrity, in line with its Code of Ethics.

- Orange's ambition is to boost the trust of all of its stakeholders, first and foremost its employees, customers, suppliers, partners and shareholders.
- Orange adopts and implements a zero tolerance policy towards corruption and influence peddling.

Roadmap

- Adopted in 2003 and updated in 2012, the Code of Ethics sets out principles for how the Group should behave (respect, integrity, team spirit, quality of services and protection of the environment) with strong values: fighting corruption and promoting human rights and freedom of expression.
- In 2012, Orange states its commitment to a zero tolerance towards corruption, with the release of its Anti-corruption policy. This policy was updated in 2017.
- This commitment lives with a Compliance approach which aims to protect Orange from the increasing risks of sanctions related to non-compliance with laws and rules.
- This 6-step approach covers the prevention of corruption, the respect of economic sanctions (embargos), the fight against money laundering and terrorism financing in mobile financial services. This continuous improvement approach is deployed in the entire Group.
